

NORFOLK SAYS NO

to domestic abuse
and sexual violence

The organisations listed below are committed to working together to support and protect the victims and survivors of domestic abuse and sexual violence.

Domestic abuse and sexual violence know no boundaries and - although women are particularly at risk - anyone from any community can become a victim, or a perpetrator, regardless of their gender, sexuality, social status, age, religion, race, culture and ability.

By working closely together we will strive to provide victims and survivors with the help they need, when they need it. We will encourage them to make their own decisions and offer support as they find ways to build a safe future for themselves and their families.

Issues surrounding abusive relationships are complex and long-standing and many problems are not easily solved. Which is why we are working in partnership, in order to share expertise and resources and to continue to develop the services we provide.

Domestic abuse and sexual violence are not caused by alcohol, drugs, unemployment, mental ill-health or cultural values. Perpetrators are responsible for their own actions and will be held accountable by Norfolk's criminal and civil justice systems.

Everyone deserves a life free from abuse. There are no excuses and no exceptions.
